

You are hereby invited to the PROFMED conference 2022

Fostering practical wisdom through clinical experience

The PROFMED conference 2022 is a one-day in-depth examination of how “practical wisdom”, by the Greek philosophers called “phronesis”, can be cultivated in health care education. The wise practitioner has kinds of knowledge that the beginner lacks. Practical wisdom involves an ability to see what a good goal in a situation may be, as well as the means to realize that goal. How should a student be met, engaged, and challenged, for such a capability to develop?

On September 27th 2022 we invite you to a highly interactive event with discussions, examples, role play and great opportunities for networking with faculty from various health professions educations.

The most powerful phases of a student’s professional development are practice periods and workplace learning. But the learning potential of practice periods is difficult to realize - the “practice gap” remains a threat in many professionals’ career path, so that students risk finding themselves thrown into the responsibilities of work life without the understanding and competence they need to thrive and do a good job.

The conference starts with a workshop by two distinguished Canadian scholars, Dr. Donald Boudreau and Professor Elizabeth Anne Kinsella from McGill University.

Elizabeth is a health professions education scholar and director of the Institute of Health Sciences Education (IHSE) whilst Don is a physician and the former director of the IHSE.

They have both authored books about medical education and practical wisdom, and will be sharing theory, experiences, and research on this topic during the morning session.

The afternoon session focuses on fostering practical wisdom in students. During this session we invite faculty, staff, and students from psychology, medicine, and the health sciences to share experiences and reflections on both teaching and learning practical wisdom through clinical experience.
